Out of home advertising (“OOH”) is the fastest growing traditional media in America – more than TV, radio, and print. OOH thrives because OOH is anything but traditional. Fueled by unrivaled vision and creativity, OOH advertising will always deliver innovative ways to help advertisers take their message further.

These pages tell the OOH story. What OOH advertising stands for. Why it is so powerful. And why advertising and media professionals should take notice.

OOH advertising is real, powerful, advertising. Read on to see why OOH should be a core part of your media mix.
Embracing change

OOH advertising today is a diverse mix of billboards, street furniture, transit, and place-based media. The medium has evolved from paper posters and hand-painted signs, to vinyl and digital billboards, to place-based displays and emerging technologies like geofencing and wireless beacons. Over the years, the only constant has been change. OOH works because OOH as an industry has always embraced change – evolving, transforming, and sometimes even disrupting, in order to stay relevant in today’s digital landscape.
